Flexibility: Calculations that can be tailored, costs analysed in great detail and reports produced quickly and easily. The ability to drill down in to prior years and reprint payslips and summaries or print multi-period reports. Hold information on such events as training days or set reminders e.g. to pay Christmas bonus, or set actions to happen at a future date e.g. change someone's salary or tax credit/cut off.

The facility to split the cost of an employee over more than one cost centre or even in the case of Earnie32 up to 10 different analysis codes, and then be able to reproduce costing information for any period. To be able to pay employees in to more than one bank account or pay from more than one bank account.

Scalable: As the company grows the capability to enhance their systems without having to change the software application.

Seamless transfer of information: Not only to save time by not having to re-key data, but also to ensure the correct transfer of information. Direct links to the company's accounts system, be it transfer of journals to the Nominal Ledger or accept information from a Job Costing Module, Time and Attendance System or a Personnel System are all becoming the standard requirements.

Support: Most of all, companies need to have fast and efficient support when it is needed. It is not good enough to have a high functional software application. It is the Keysolve ethos to ensure that the demands of the payroll/accounts department are assisted and supported by a trained, efficient, helpful and fully responsive Help-Desk, when it is required.

Designed and supported by payroll experts Earnie32 is a 32-bit Windows Payroll System, not just a module of an accounts system. “Catering for all the above needs as standard, we will always continue to look for ways in which it we can help our clients improve their efficiency” - Andrew Doyle, Director.
